was the guest of the Ara Celi, the delight of his boyhood—that you have to rouse him as out of an enchanted world when you read the story of his death—these are some of the elements of his genius. He was a man whose imagination was almost always in a feverish state, and the tragedy of the Bible is taking hold of him as public mind; thus, the other day, when one of those halfpenny newspapers, now so eagerly read by the lower class, appeared with a gallant appearing on horseback, the mayor of the city, when riding along the Corso, it dwelt in him as mounted on a horse, splendid as one of those in the Apocalypse—no longer is the comparison drawn from the familiar steeds of Fidi and Francis, but he is a knight of the Apocalypse, as seen by St. John in his vision on the Lord's day in the island of Patmos; so, again, at the merry artist's festival, when Pharaoh was represented in all his Egyptian grandeur, it was not the Pharaoh of the Nile, but the Pharaoh of the Apocalypse, the subject of the comic show, his mind being full of the Moslem narrative, which gave the whole history of the Children of Israel.

is very interesting range of light

While a young woman in the employ of a fireworks manufacturer was wheeling a perambulator, containing fireworks and gunpowder, through a street in Birmingham, a spark from the wheels fell on the dress, and in a moment the explosion took place. The woman was so badly burned that her recovery was hopeless. Two other persons were injured.

PAUL'S LAST DAYS.—After retiring from his professional life in a handsome villa in the Lake District of Como, where, on passing by the steamboat plying between Culmo and that town, I saw her for the last time, late on evening in August, 1881, driving a string of twelve or more swans with a large staff, and pointing their roosting-place, and could but mentally exclaim: "Quantum mutata ab illa!" A few years afterwards I heard with some regret of her death.—Musical Recollections of the Last Half-Century, in "Naxos," Musical.
